

EXHIBIT A

Stock Whisper's profile claimed: "We are business graduated with a professional certifications [sic] in [Finance & Accounting]. A few of us are associated with the academic field, teaching both short and long courses on Finance and Accounting." Notably, Stock Whisper was a DreamTeam Group alias.

Momentum Trading's profile claimed: "I am an independent trader focused on stocks that are in a state of momentum. I focus on event driven securities such as companies going through earnings, mergers, and biotech events. I have worked as a professional trader in the past."

Thomas Option Hunter's profile claimed: "I trade stocks and options and mainly focus on event driven strategies such as mergers & acquisitions, biotechnology, and earnings. As I place trades in my portfolio, I will update my blog with the trade, price, and thought process."

Wonderful Wizard's profile claimed "I studied finance at The University of Illinois and am currently trading my own personal account. I look for value investments with a potential for rapid increase because of catalysts. I try to combine all aspects of investing including looking at both the technical and fundamental picture."

Elegant Trading's profile claimed "I trade my own personal assets and look to share some of the same strategies and information that I use in my own trading."

Kingmaker's profile claimed "My expertise is in researching and writing about micro and small-cap biotechnology stocks. I run a volatility trading group that focuses on exploiting differences in IV vs. HV in biotech names with upcoming catalysts.

Equity Options Guru's profile claimed "I focus on analyzing micro and small-cap companies that appear to be poised for outsized gains compared to the market. I reach my investing decisions based upon fundamental, technical, and macro indicators. I have previously worked as a volatility trader and long/short equity analyst.”

Expected Growth’s profile claimed “I am a full-time investor focused on managing my own portfolio and living off the capital gains. I tend to analyze small-cap stocks, especially companies that present an attractive risk/reward opportunity. I'm not afraid to take risks if the return possibilities justify it.”

Christine Andrews claimed she “is an analyst and fund manager with almost 20 years of investment experience. She covers a variety of industries, with a special focus on technology, and likes to write about value stocks, poorly understood or under-followed situations, and contrarian perspectives.”

James Ratz claimed he “is a portfolio manager at Zebra Capital based out of Los Angeles. He focuses on providing actionable information to investors of all levels.”